On behalf of City Council and the people of Edmonton, welcome to Fur-Ch! 2018, "Viva Paws Vegas."

Each year, "furry" fans descend on Edmonton, bringing panda-monium to our streets. These anthropomorphic party animals aren't Kitten around — they're here to mix and flamingle, amoose themselves and whip their hare back and forth. With performers, costumes and creators, this convention will help visitors to scratch their furry itch.

I thank the koalafied Fur-Ch! organizers and volunteers for putting this event together. For all those visiting our city, I hope you leave here energized and rejuvenated after spending time in Edmonton — remember to hold on to that fe-line when you leave!

Best wishes for an enjoyable convention!

Letter to Visitors

Welcome to the City of Paws Vegas!

No matter whether you are a seasoned veteran or are new to our wonderful event, you will find no shortage of things to see and do. Visit an attraction, take in a show, attend a workshop, or try your hand at some of the many games and tournaments going on throughout the weekend! If you have any questions or need assistance, track down one of our many friendly volunteers or staff. We're here to make sure your time here is one to remember!

We are proud to welcome our Resident Guest of Honour for the weekend, Demicoeur. She has been working tirelessly for many months, providing us with ideas, marketing materials, and an endless supply of enthusiasm. She will be presenting at several panels and participating in several events, as well as vending on the Paws Vegas Strip. Give her a visit and give her some of your hard-earned dollars!

The City of Paws Vegas could not operate without the hundreds of hours our staff and volunteers spend throughout the year to make this event happen. I am grateful for their hard work and appreciate it tremendously. When you see these staff and volunteers in your travels throughout Paws Vegas, take a moment to thank them for their efforts.

Again, on behalf of myself and all of our incredible volunteers and staff, welcome, and thank you for spending your weekend with us!

Top 5 Tips to make your visit to Paws Vegas more enjoyable

5 Relax. Or don't! Your visit to Paws Vegas can be a whirlwind of entertainment, dining and shopping or it can be just a time to spend some time with friends. It's up to you how you want to spend your time here, but no matter how you make the most of that time, make sure to get some rest, eat properly and don't overdo it. You'll feel better and won't burn out before your visit is over!

4 Shop early, shop often! The Paws Vegas Strip is THE place to shop in town and nearly 40 unique vendors will be offering a wide array of merchandise and/or commissions. The Fur-Eh! Company Store is also a destination onto itself and you won't want to miss the Paws Vegas or Fur-Eh! themed products. But, shop early as inventory is limited!

3 Take lots of photos. Did you know Paws Vegas has a flickr group where you can share your photos of your visit? That's right! Just visit flickr.fureh.ca where you can view photos from past years as well as what will be a treasure trove of new photos from this year's event!

2 Get there early! If you're taking in any panels or events, get there early for best seating. (For select events, "Whale", "High Roller" and "Card Shark" attendees will receive early seating assignment.) And, as a courtesy to other Guests and panelists, please arrive on time for all events to reduce disruption.

1 Check out new things. There is so much to do and so little time! We encourage you to check out events & panels that you have not previously attended before and expand your horizons! After all, what happens in Paws Vegas, stays in Paws Vegas (unless you don't want it to, that is)!

You bet. It's fun!

CASINO NIGHT

Featuring BLACKJACK, ROULETTE, MONEY WHEEL & SLOTS

THURSDAY JUNE 14, 2018 7:30pm – 9:30pm ENCORE THEATRE

Each participant will receive 100 Paws Vegas Bucks in chips upon entering the Casino. As per AGLC regulations, no real money is exchanged for "funny money/chips" and the winnings have no actual value. All ages are welcome to this casino night event, though minors must be accompanied by their guardian as per Fur-Eh! Code of Conduct.

“Misunderstood”

That's often the word that is used to describe many of the dogs that Underdogs Rescue Society works with to place in their forever home.

Founded in 2012 by Jade Graham (who serves as President of the organization) and Natasha Buff (the Vice-President of the organization), Underdogs grew from the idea that it wasn't just one breed who needed rescue, but many breeds that often are thought of as “scary” or “dangerous” in some way. This includes rottweilers, pit bulls, bulldogs and other “power breeds” that are often some of the most gentle dogs you could meet despite their large size and intimidating appearance.

Their first dog placement was a young pit bull mix named “Mater” whose owners could not afford to keep him after he was hit by a car and suffered a broken leg. Mater would be only the first of 183 dogs placed in loving homes (so far).

“Underdogs was created because we saw the need out there for dogs that didn't get an opportunity to show how loving, and wonderful they are,” Graham tells us, “Being judged on their looks, or their breed was something we felt was not fair, and we could no longer stand by and not do what we can to help these dogs and to educate the public about them.”

Graham is not unaware that there are many misconceptions about “power breed” dogs. She says that to deny that they have certain strengths or attributes would be irresponsible.

“They are just dogs. Just like every other dog, their breed and looks do not define them, so please judge them on who they are and what they are like. Also, please be responsible. Make sure you are prepared for a dog, and have the time, money and ability to care for one properly. That you will take on the responsibility that comes with owning one of these dogs, that they are good members of society.

You might not have realized it, but owning one of these dogs comes with a lot of patience. Not with your dog, but with other people, and how they judge them, and you for having them. Also, please do your research first. Talk to reputable rescues and people about what it looks like to really have not only one of these dogs, but any dog. Make sure you are prepared, and best of all. Enjoy a lot of kisses and snuggles.”

A not-for-profit organization, Underdogs Rescue is dedicated to rescuing large power breed dogs in shelters across Canada. Humane Societies, the SPCA, municipal Animal Control and other rescues are just some of the places that Underdogs works with in an effort to re-home these dogs to responsible and loving dog owners.

“Our dogs are all Canadian dogs. So that means we only help rescue dogs here, as there is a huge number in need sitting right where we live. We work with many shelters, SPCAs, and owner surrenders. We work really hard to have a great relationship with our animal control officers and humane societies to help where we can,” explains Graham.

As part of the daunting task of finding permanent and loving homes for these dogs, Underdogs has a network of foster families in Edmonton, Red Deer and Calgary happy to take on the responsibility of caring for and rehabilitating many of the rescued pets. Underdogs completes a home-check on every potential foster home to ensure that the environment that a rescue dog goes to is a suitable one. Foster families are provided with everything that they need to foster including food, dog toys, training and more.

“Being a foster can be an amazing opportunity,” says Graham excitedly, “You get a ton of training support, so you learn so much. You get to enjoy the company of some amazing dogs, knowing that you have helped them on their journey to finding their forever home. You also get to see the difference you are making from the time the dog comes to you, to when they leave. And yes, sometimes fosters can’t say goodbye, and that will always be the hardest part, it’s also the most rewarding. Seeing them live happy, full lives is an incredible thing to witness.”

But, it’s not just about rescuing these wonderful dogs. Through education, Underdogs Rescue encourages responsible pet ownership. They also would like to see an end to legislation that includes breed profiling.

“For example”, Graham begins, “there are still stories regarding the ‘pit bull’-type dog such as that their jaws lock, or that they have brains that swell. None of these myths are true. They were only made up to scare people, and to further breed specific legislation. Which means banning all of these dogs based on their looks, and breed, not what they are actually like.”

How you can help

“You can help in many different ways. You can volunteer your time at events, such as Fur-Eh! You can donate, you can foster, you can share our information and pleas on social media. You can donate items towards auctions, or photography to help our dogs get wonderful pictures, helping them get adopted. And, you can also adopt. There is no way that is too big or small in helping,” says Graham.

If you are interested in becoming a foster home, Graham explains what the steps are. “The first step is to head to our website, and fill out an application. We take pride in making sure we match our fosters up with the most appropriate fit for each home, so if we have a dog that fits with you, we contact you via telephone, and do a phone interview. Followed by that, there is a home check, and a dog will be placed with you after that. If you are interested in learning more about fostering. Feel free to chat with us, or check out our website and look under the foster tab.”

And, as for all those funds that generous Fur-Eh! attendees have donated (over $7,000 in the past two years)?

“Underdogs uses all funds for our dogs,” says Graham, “All of us, board members included, are all unpaid volunteers. We raise money so we can take responsible care for our dogs. That includes all vet work that needs to be done, and also a lot of training. We care greatly that our dogs are good members of their community, so training is a huge aspect of our rescue and what we believe in.”

Underdogs has been Fur-Eh!’s Charity Partner since 2016. This year’s fundraising goal at Fur-Eh! is $5,555 which includes proceeds from the Live Auction, 50/50 draws and general donations.

I SCREAM, YOU SCREAM, WE ALL SCREAM FOR... POUTINE?

It started with the idea that ice cream doesn't define us as a Canadian con, poutine does. So, back in 2014, Fur-Eh! held the first ever "Poutine Social" patterned after popular Ice Cream Social events that have been held at other conventions.

The Poutine Social was a smash hit and was a near instant sell out.

"We wanted to do something that was unique and that spoke to our Canadian nature and what better food to choose to build an event around than poutine?" recalls Fur-Eh! Convention Chair Thallanor Rasmuson.

Little did they know that this would become one of the hottest tickets at Fur-Eh! every year since.

100 tickets are offered for the Poutine Social. This year "High Roller" and "Whale" tier registrants can opt for a ticket to the Social and whatever tickets remain are sold to other Guests. They usually sell out in minutes.

The Poutine Social is held in the "Locker Room" at the West end of the hotel on Friday June 15 from 6pm to 7:30pm. Tickets are required for this event. Tax & gratuity are already included in the price.

WHEN A DOG'S BREAKFAST IS CONSIDERED A COMPLIMENT

Now in it's 3rd year, the Dogs' Breakfast is neither a breakfast nor is it only for canines.

"The Dogs' Breakfast was originally created to give our Guests another dining option other than the local restaurants or the hotel buffet," says bcbreakaway, Fur-Eh!'s Guest Experience Manager, "I know the name is a bit confusing because it's actually a lunch buffet, but the name was cute and it kind of stuck!"

Featuring delicious items including: Fresh buns, gathered greens, coleslaw, creamed corn, corned beef hash, traditional eggs benedict and featuring Chicken, Sausage & Shrimp Gumbo, the Dogs' Breakfast will fill your belly as you dine with other Fur-Eh! Guests. Tea & Coffee as well as a selection of desserts are also included.

This dining event also serves as a "thank you" to our Volunteers that have put in 8 or more hours to help make Fur-Eh! possible, so take the time to thank any volunteers you see at this yummy meal!

The Dogs' Breakfast is held in the "Locker Room" at the West end of the hotel on Saturday June 16 from 11am to 1pm. Tickets are required for this event. Tax & gratuity are already included in the price.

GUEST OF HONOUR DINNER BECOMES A PREMIUM DINING EXPERIENCE

With five separate buffet "stations", each featuring scrumptious dining choices, the revamped Guest of Honour Dinner is sure to be an even more enjoyable experience than it has in past years.

As always, Guests will get to meet and mingle with other "Whale" and "High Roller" attendees. Our Guest Of Honour, Demicoeur, will also be on hand.

This year's menu will include a Salad Station, a Live Carving Station (featuring carved Sirloin Au Jus), a Live Italian Pasta Station (featuring a Seafood Medley pasta & chicken), an Asian Food Station (with Sweet Chili Chicken, Special Fried Rice and Stir Fried Greens) and a Dessert Station.

"We wanted to see the Guest of Honour dinner become more of an 'event' than it has been," said Guest Experience Manager, bcbreakaway, "I kept thinking that we have this wonderful exclusive meal that looks no different than our other dining events and we wanted to change that."

Based on the above, it looks like they did!

The Guest of Honour Dinner is held in the "Ridgewood" room located on the 2nd level, accessible by elevator from the main lobby. It will begin at 6pm on Saturday June 16 and run until 7:30pm. Tickets are required for this event. Tax & gratuity are already included in the price.

THE STORY OF JACK

We asked Jade Graham of Underdogs about what the most heartwarming story of one of their rescues is.

"One of our biggest cases of abuse was with our boy Jack. Jack was constantly at the shelter in Calgary due to abuse and neglect, when an officer caught the owner in a parking lot, beating Jack repeatedly. That was finally the last straw for the courts to take him away for good and to allow Jack a chance at a better life.

The shelter contacted us to help, and after we did our assessment of him, we brought him into our care right away.

Jack has gone through a tremendous amount of abuse, yet is now a pretty famous Underdogs alumni dog.

He frequently does big events with us, such as Calgary Comic & Entertainment Expo, Petapolooza, etc. He has been an amazing example of a dog that has forgiven and let go of his past and he enjoys the amazing life he has now."

DEMI

THIS YEAR'S BACKSTREET ARTIST

We took a moment out of Demi's day to ask what the brass tacks are behind her very talented art.

What got you into the fandom and how long have you been involved in it?

I was in college for animation and dirt broke. Eating a bowl of peas for dinner, 12 cents to my name broke. I was considering dropping out of school when a friend of mine mentioned that the furry fandom is a wonderful community and commissions artists pretty regularly. It wasn't the first time I'd drawn an anthro, I'd followed Goldenwolf's art before, so I started posting artwork and soon after started taking commissions. It's hard to believe but it's nearly been 10 years since then and I've never looked back!

How did you get started as an artist?

When I was really little, I was obsessed with Disney films and used to pause my VHS tapes to draw frames freehand. For as long as I can remember, I've wanted to draw and write stories for a living. Aside from high school, I had no formal education until college, I just practiced a lot. I went to Sheridan for animation and got a better foundational knowledge from them, but I found I was more interested in comics by the end. Since graduating I've just been trying to improve and create comics of my own.

How did you approach the artwork for this year's theme? What's your process?

This year's theme was really intimidating for me! I still struggle with perspective and structural drawing, but I was inspired by the bright lights and colours Vegas embodies. I tried to bring that vivid liveliness to my work. My process usually starts with hunting down references, then I start sketching. I'll sometimes do a bunch of thumbnails before deciding what direction I want to go. After a sketch is nailed down, I jump straight into colour. Only some of my work gets inked, most of it I just start slapping colour under the sketch and then eventually merging them together. The process is pretty organic and changes depending upon what I want out of the piece I'm making.

What advice would you give to other artists, particularly those starting out?

Done is better than perfect. I hear the old adage 'quality over quantity' all the time, but I think that's bogus. The more work you produce, the more you'll improve. I found a story about a pottery teacher who asked half her class to make one pot they could perfect to their heart's content, while asking the other half to make 30 pots of whatever quality they could manage. The 'quantity' half universally made better pots by the end, because they'd been learning from their past mistakes. Perfectionism will only hold you back. Be proud of what you accomplish, mistakes and all, then move onto the next thing.

A good foundation in anatomy and life drawing will also work wonders though!

Tell us about what you enjoy most about being an artist.

I love bringing stories and characters to life. I'm an avid reader and I've been writing almost as long as I've been drawing. The fact that I can draw the characters from my imagination is so much fun.

THE FOUNDING OF THE CITY OF PAWS VEGAS

researched and written by Joshiah Warbaum

If you were silly enough to believe any of the legends that a stranger told you as you walked down the fanciful streets of Paws Vegas, you might actually think that a giant poker chip landed in the middle of the desert, and as it sunk into the sand, the cracks left between the giant shelves of fallen ceramic created the roads that would ultimately lay the framework for the gambling capital of the world.

You might also harken to another myth, that the city arose from the need for a hotel, and in the back of that hotel, desert travelers gambled away their gold and riches for even just a chance to find pure, clean drinking water, and shelter from the brutal, unforgiving sun.

No matter how many myths there actually were, the real story behind the creation of Paws Vegas was less to do with a group of people, and more to do with one person in the right place, at the right time, just as it was for so many of the other great cities in the world.

If you dug deep enough, you'd find the dark and seedy underbelly of history, where the city was little more than a fort in the middle of the desert, built around a land that was once rich with rivers and marshes. The rivers went underground, as well, and the marshes dried up, leaving plenty of water to be drilled for in wells, but also leaving behind a climate that was simply inhospitable for the average living thing. For years and years, the fort was used as a point of deception during times of war and socio-political change, until finally, Octavius Gass took control of the fort on government orders.

Long after the days of John Furmont, for whom one of the main strips in the city was named, control over the fort continued to change hands, but it was Gass who first named the land the "Paws Vegas Ranchero," and the wine that he made on his newly irrigated land turned Paws Vegas into one of the finest stops in the old west for weary travelers and gold fanatics.

The land stayed with Gass until he lost it in the form of a lien to Archibald Mewart, and it stayed with his family until the land was bought entirely by the Paws Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad company, in a project that was overseen by William Andrews Bark. The old dog was famous for his desire to bring railroads to the country like never before, and bringing more commuters to the Paws Vegas outpost would be helpful beyond the growth of commerce and population.

Despite the horrid, arid climate of the land, there were still enough marsh beds left in the desert for farming to become the primary source of income for most people living around the outpost, and shortly after William Andrews Bark passed, the land that he helped to bring prosperity to was made into an official county. In honor of all that he did to bring Paws Vegas to world, the county was called Bark County, and the world was quickly learning that the budding area had a far worse bite than anything.

As it grew from a water stop, to a wagon train station, to an actual train station, Paws Vegas continued to expand not just in size, but in technological advancement. Like all cities that grew in the early 1900's on the west coast, the railroads were essential to the survival of Paws Vegas, and as they continued to spread, smaller railroad lines went between the main hub of Paws Vegas and smaller towns, like Bullfrog and Tonopah. Many people fled their simpler lives in smaller towns for the supposed glitz and glamor that Paws Vegas had to offer, and that was long before such words could be used to describe the place.

Like most other places that lived through the great depression, however, the late teens and early 20's brought small ruin to Paws Vegas, and with railroad bankruptcy looming over the heads of all who thought they'd found the promised land, it was up to some less than savory people to save the city from the burden of its own growth.

Once again, what you believed about the growth of Paws

Vegas would be up to myth, but within all of the stories that swelled, much like the population of the city, there was always a grain of truth to the myth, and a grain of reason to why so many people would flock to a town that was fighting a failing economy.

The construction of the Hoofer Dam was just the thing that the west needed to be reborn, and while credit could be given to President Herbert Hoofer for giving the order to build it, more credit may have been due to the flocks of single, lonely furs that made their way across the desert, hopeful to find any kind of a job waiting for them when they arrived. The population of Paws Vegas quintupled in that span of time, and as the dam went up, so did the demand for entertainment from a new wealth of tired, ornery men.

The descendants of the late Susan Collie still live in the Paws Vegas area to this day, but she was just as responsible as anyone for the survival of the city of sin. She was the first, and perhaps most famous showgirl to grace the stages of the saloons and hotels that began to pop up over Paws Vegas in the early 30's, and after a long day of sweating in the desert sun and working in deplorable conditions, her voice of passionate silk and hypnotic movements were the only thing that seemed to bring the men of the city any joy.

It was just enough to keep the peace in Paws Vegas, for a time, but where there were saloons, there was alcohol, and where there was alcohol, there would certainly be excessive consumption, and someone looking to take advantage of a few drunken workers.

Jobs at the dam were plentiful, and cheap housing began popping up where farms once ruled the desert, but the jobs didn't pay the best, the houses were of a poor quality, and when you'd seen Susan Collie dancing across the stage so many times without so much as catching a wink from her eye, it was enough to drive some men to criminal lives. Where legend and myth meet, the mafia is often present, and no doubt, William Andrews Bark would have turned in his grave if he saw the way that his city was expanding.

Growth of a person often came through hard work and overcoming adversity, both internal and external. Growth of a city, whether or not the people wanted to accept it, was going to come through something a bit more sinister.

To this day, no one was quite sure who founded the first gambling den in Paws Vegas. To think of police and city officials trying to chase casino owners and gamblers from the streets of Bark County would have been laughable in the modern day, but in the mid 30's, it was a very real sight, and the growing presence of crime forced the government to erect a new place for Hoofer Dam workers to live, called Rover City.

The efforts did little to smother the growing need for entertainment, and even hurt the growth of businesses in the desert's favorite city. As such, problems continued to persist through the late 30's and into the early 40's. Even when things appeared to improve with the first proper resort being built on the Paws Vegas strip, an equal and opposite pillar of criminal activity popped up just down the street, in the form of The Flamingo.

Even after Bunny Sergal, one of the most notorious mafia bosses in the west, met his end to a hail of bullets in front of his own casino, the criminal influence continued to push itself on Paws Vegas, to great and terrible ends. Gambling was there to stay, and throughout the 50's and 60's, growth continued in such a measurable way that the government couldn't possibly fathom shutting the location down. Through legitimate and illegitimate channels, the gambling money and tax funds were making their way back to the federal government, and for most, that was good enough.

For the so-called 'King of Aviation,' Howard Roo, it was nowhere near good enough.

"There's no reason that this has to end violently, but I'm not leaving this room. I like it here. I'm staying here. You're the ones that need to leave."

Perhaps the tallest legend of Paws Vegas, and one that was steeped in truth, was the story of Howard Roo, then known as the hero of the American aviation industry. In the late 60's, with Paws Vegas growing faster than ever under mafia rule, the Howard Roo decided to spend the night in the Dachshund Inn. He was so taken with the room, the atmosphere, and the exciting, fast-paced world of the city around him that he awoke with a new sense of purpose.

He'd conquered the skies; goodness knew that he owned them, but there was somewhere that his planes couldn't quite reach, and more than anything, he awoke with a sense of purpose to change all of that.

The mob, however, wasn't quite so accepting of his presence.

"We own this city, we own this room, and if you don't vacate so another person can come and spend the night in this bed, we're gonna own you, too. Beat it."

"Do you own this place?"

"I don't."

"Tell you what. Send for your boss, okay? I've got a proposition for him."

If not for his title, it was likely that Howard Roo wouldn't have survived that conversation, much less the rest of his stay, but he wasn't the kind of person who could be swept under the rug.

As was his wish, the owner of the hotel, and a prominent mafia boss was standing in his room only minutes later, with a bloodthirsty scowl upon his muzzle.

"And to what do I owe the pleasure of being summoned by the King of Aviation, hm? I'm sure you can understand that I'm a very busy man, and I'd hate to have you take a bite out of my time."

The man standing there, pressed up in a black suit with white pinstripes, too clean and too luxurious to be real, was none other than Kenneth Wolfburn, a canine who thought that he ruled the Dachshund Inn, and the rest of the desert along with it.

After years of owning his hotel, he thought he'd seen everything that the world could throw at him, but when push came to shove, he'd never been in the presence of such a powerful man as Howard Roo.

"Violence won't be necessary, Mr. Wolfburn. I'd like to buy your hotel."

Had a stereotypical cigar been hanging from the side of Kenneth's muzzle, it would have fallen to the ground as his jaw dropped.

"Y-you...you really got no idea who you're talking to, do you?"

"I know very well who I'm talking to, and I'm sure that you know who I am. Are you worried that the check might bounce?"

There was no clever ploy or delicate, foolish gamble behind Howard's words. The pitch to buy the hotel was the gamble, and the entirety of the deal took place in the secret comfort of his hotel room, the one that would become his for the many years to follow.

The exchange took place completely off the table. Kenneth Wolfburn retired as a man who escaped the mob before it had a chance to consume him, and in his place, Howard Roo took over not only the Dachshund Inn, but several other properties around it with the finances he generated. His name was revered as a real estate mogul in the annals of Paws Vegas history, but no one truly knew how instrumental he was to ridding the city of its criminal influence.

Others followed his lead over the 70's and 80's, and finally, Paws Vegas stepped into the super-resort era that so many people know it for today. The gambling, showgirls, flowing liquor and entertainment have lingered around, and though the mob is no longer an issue for those who walk the gold-lined streets of what many considered the greatest city on Earth, there are still troubles to take care of, and things to be done that the average tourist can't possibly know about.

After all, a city in the desert, overflowing with gamblers, loan sharks, boozers and lechers is always just one step away from disaster...

Courteous Behavior: Expectations from our guests can be found in the Paws Vegas Code of Conduct Emergencies: Dial "9-1-1" from any telephone to reach Fire/Police/Ambulance.

First Aid: Kits can be found in Con Ops and the Dealer's Den for minor cuts and scrapes.

Lost Property: Guest experience staff might pick up your property. They most likely have taken it to Lost and Found at the Hotel Front Desk. There are other events that occur at the hotel during Fur-Eh! and having one Lost and Found is the best chance for everyone to reunite with their belongings.

Parking: There will be designated spaces in the parking lots for events that take place outside. We will do our best to have these areas marked off well in advance but if circumstances change, we may request you move your vehicle to another available parking spot.

Noise Complaints:

Please be advised that we must abide by Hotel rules regarding noise complaints. To reduce the chance of noise complaints, please do not congregate in Hotel hallways outside of rooms and please keep the volume of music, talking, etc at a reasonable level in Guest rooms.

Some areas of the floor is strictly off limits to gamblers & guests.
