Film Industry Furs: Cinema Camera Building

 Alcott Panelroom (Westin Boston Seaport District Hotel, 425 Summer Street, Boston, MA 02210, USA)

As a gear head for camera tech as well as a passionate creative, I'd like to run a panel on the basics of cinema camera building and the jobs of the camera, grip, and electrical departments on professional film sets. I'd like to feature a breakdown of what each part of a cinema camera rig does and why its important to us film makers for achieving the vision of a project. This would ideally include me renting a cinema camera like an ARRI and a decent lens, pairing this with my personal accesorry kit I'd want to demonstrate how to build out a camera for film set use and best practice for handling these wildly expensive but amazingly useful artistic tools. I'd also like sprinkle in bits of information about on set etiquette and structure. I'd seek to give insight into the specifics of on set roles and what being a freelancer in the film world is like. That bit might sound boring but I want to give my furry friends who are interested in film work some honest advice. Hopefully I can communicate (without too much cynicism) what the industry is really like, what I have learned works for me, and what I know not to do.

Bread and Water Soup: The Game

📍 Paine Panelroom (Westin Boston Seaport District Hotel, 425 Summer Street, Boston, MA 02210, USA)

Once upon a time in 2002, a Playstation 2 kaiju battling game called Robot Alchemic Drive was released and would go on to make millions of internet goers laugh for the unintentional memes and jokes it generated. Freedom to direct the plot in ways that can only be described as insanity and "so bad it's good" voice acting make the experience an unexpected comedy. Date a girl who tries to make bread and water soup for your date meal? Mmmm mmm sounds tasty. Flatten this game's version of Walmart because it'll make your anime girlfriend happy? Sure, if that's what the people want! The name of the game in this panel is audience participation with all plot decisions decided by the audience themselves. Are we an angel or a menace? Do we wanna make the game be about robots or a blossoming pro lesbian relationship? The choice is yours and all tied together with commentary from your otter host Talcott!
